Keeping Yerushalayim in our Hearts and Prayers

Tradition teaches that there is always a connection between the parsha and the haftorah. This week we merit to once again read the comforting words of Yeshayahu in conjunction with parshat Va'etchanan. What connection, then, is there between the haftorah of Nachamu and parshat Va'etchanan?

The haftorah opens with Hashem exhorting the prophets to comfort the people. Their message of consolation and redemption is directed "al lev Yerushalayim" which is often translated as "regarding the heart" or words that will put the heart at ease. However, the word "al" [1] usually denotes "on," rendering the verse that the message of the prophets needs to be "on" the heart. The Ma'or Einayim [2] understands this that the message must be "on" our hearts or in other words, felt very strongly.

Though he himself takes this understanding in a specific direction, the Me'or Einayim's interpretation of the verse can open a new perspective.

Perhaps we can understand that the prophets are telling the people that their consolation is inextricably bound with Yerushalayim being "al lev" –unified with their hearts. It is only when we constantly carry the thought of Yerushalayim on our hearts that we will merit the fulfillment of our beautiful haftorah.

The word "lev" also has a more specific connotation in the lexicon of Chazal – prayer. When the Torah speaks of serving Hashem with our hearts, the midrash is quick to note that this refers to prayer, which is the "service of the heart." When we care about something deeply it will naturally and automatically find its way into our prayers. This definition is extremely relevant to our context as well. Having Yerushalayim "on our hearts" is best expressed through our constant prayers regarding the city.

However, this recipe leaves space for disappointment. How is that for two thousand years we are supposed to be constantly and incessantly praying for the city and caring about it? One would imagine that when people saw that their ceaseless prayers and feelings went unanswered for so long that they were channeling their prayers and emotions in a futile endeavor?

Perhaps this is what the parsha comes to teach us. Moshe davened 515 times for his ability to enter the Land of Israel and all of his attempts were seemingly and exercise in futility. However, we are taught that Hashem had to tell him to stop his efforts as a single additional prayer would have "forced" Hashem to allow him to entry into the Land.

'I'm here to tell the world the truth'

Hegseth visit Israel in effort to get to the 'ground truth' of the reality as it really is, not as presented in the media.

The purpose of the visit is for the journalists to get a genuine picture of Israel through guided tours.

Monday they visited the Muslim quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem, the Western Wall, and houses of Jews living in the Muslim quarter.

One of the visitors, Pete Hegseth, is a rising figure in the American conservative media, a veteran of combat in Afghanistan and Iraq, currently serving as Fox News Contributor and the author of the recently released book "In the Arena" profiling a new vision for America's role domestically and in foreign policy. Hegseth spoke about his motivations for coming to see the reality in Israel for himself.

"It's an honor to visit here as a friend of Israel to see what really goes on here in the Holy Land. It's our duty to show support and to come here to see things for ourselves, not through the media, so that we can present things accurately."

What possible difference could there have been between the 515th time Moshe prayed and the 516th time? This teaches us that we do not truly know the effects of a heartfelt emotional prayer. We may not receive the answer that we desire but our emotional prayers do not go to waste.[3]

The same is true regarding Yerushalayim. We need to constantly keep Yerushalayim "on our hearts" in prayer despite the fact that people for thousands of years have been praying for exactly the same thing. Perhaps our prayer will be the single additional one that will cause Hashem to return to His holy city.

When asked what he thinks of CNN's coverage of Israel, Hegseth replied: "Well it's very one sided. We see it in the American media covering our conflicts, it's a one sided story very often. Our job here is to get down to the ground truth. I was a soldier in Iraq and there's a big difference between what you read in the New York Times and what's actually happening. You have to get in there and get your hands dirty and see it, so that you can give a really accurate reflection of what's happening."
